37. What common concern do Christians and Secularists share about popular culture in America?

Both Christians and Secularists are concerned about the growing anti-intellectualism produced by American popular culture. Because of the fascination with mind-numbing images and incessant noise, Americans are becoming increasingly dumb and ignorant. Captivated by popular culture, we are too distracted to engage and reflect upon critical ideas. If the general population doesn't learn to spend more time unplugged, we could be headed for a new type of Dark Age in human history. [4.3]

38. Why should Secularism be considered a religious worldview?

Although most worldviews appeal to some form of deity when approaching life's ultimate questions, it isn't a defining condition for the term religion. Among other things, a religion is a comprehensive set of beliefs that address the cause, nature, and purpose of the universe. Even though secularism denies the existence of God, it still has a theology. Secularism doesn't just deny the supernatural; it puts forth its own answers for questions like “Why we are here?” and “Where we are going?” and “How we should live?” [4.7]
